Change the pitch of your audio or video files. Here you will find a FREE PDF presentation on what is timepiece tagging and how it can be used to better manage and secure your timepieces. Timepiece tagging can be defined as the one to one association of an electronic timepiece with an identity. For that, a timepiece needs to be correctly identified. We are proposing here three different ways you can identify your timepieces: By using a serial number By using a manufacturer's Tag A timepiece can be identified by a serial number as a first step. It can be a combination of the serial number and a number or a simple number. Some timepieces are already associated with a serial number that is taken from a paper tag or sticker and glued to the case or, with cases mounted to a special stationary called a watch frame. Sometimes, the serial number of the case is also applied to the crown of the watch. With this serial number, each timepiece will be associated with the corresponding serial number, which is then useful for tracking purposes. These numbers must then be associated with an electronic timepiece. It can be done with the timepiece identification number and the manufacturer's number. It can also be done with the ability to configure a timepiece thanks to an electronic tag: Timepiece tag Here a number of these tags can be associated with a timepiece and the following functions can be provided: - the timepiece can be associated with an element of an electronic timepiece - the timepiece can be associated to any configuration of a timepiece - any user can configure, change or update the timepiece tag - the tag can be associated with a timepiece using the serial number - the tag can be associated to a timepiece using a manufacturer's number Vendor-based tag In this case, a timepiece is first identified by its serial number. This serial number must then be associated with one of the tags published by a corresponding manufacturer. The tag can be programmed either through the manufacturer itself or through some configuration file. In the case of the manufacturers, the manufacturer's timepiece tag is published as far as possible on the manufacturer's website. This tag is either a number or a composite of a serial number associated with some "configuration data". For example, a "manufacturer", "series", "model", etc... The way the tag is formatted will depend on the manufacturer.
