Sometimes, after this has been running for some time, it starts to hang on 'Starting X' for a few seconds, and then fails. How to find out where it is failing, and how to solve this? A: Here's a procedure that will prevent all sort of weird issues in your application (or others): Create an empty C# (.NET 3.5 or higher) class library project, and create a.NET 4.5 DLL that hosts it (start with a default blank project then create a new C# Class Library, select.NET 4.5 "C# Class Library" for the language and platform, and add a reference to your application). Use the DLL to generate a new key, store it somewhere, and create a new.NET 3.5 or higher WinForms Project using that DLL and the new key. The procedure doesn't prevent the real problem, that you can't actually do that a lot: debug your application and always have your debugging key. But it at least will help you pin down this problem if it does exist. A: This is a common issue and has several causes. There is a good article on it here A: The problem is, that we are making calls into the.net framework. If the framework is not loaded, the debugger may hang and never release the process. 1.
