Usually that's where the error message is. If you have a problem with the "scanning" of the drive, it will look like that every time you run the program. A few years back I got rid of a virus that filled up my drive and those files will stay until I restart the computer or clean the registry so you may want to check that first. But I agree it doesn't work with the error that you get. Hopefully you don't have any problems Thanks for your quick reply. I was hoping that it might help. There isn't really any specific programs that I use to check the disk's integrity. I haven't had any problem with my current computer, so I doubt that it is the case. However, I just don't know what the problem is. I had a headache for a while, but it disappeared the next day. I am having problems with my tv. I have a philips5021s300, I can connect to the TV with a HDMI cable, I can watch movies with that, but I can't get my picture to go to the tv. It will run the window that comes up saying I am watching movies but the picture is not there on the TV. I am running it in windows 7 If you can't make it work with the hdmi output, you could try vga, there are plenty of posts on this subject in the review section. There may be a way to save an image of the screen, but I have no idea how. I did search for this on the internet, but all I could find are apps that should be able to make a digital copy of the screen, but they didn't work. Also, the philips documentation lists two different hdmi cables, the first one has 3 pin connectors, the second has 2 pin connectors. I am having problems with my tv.
