We describe a randomized controlled trial that compared the efficacy and safety of intravenous endovascular therapy (IVT) and IVT plus oral dosing of 3 weeks of treatment with aspirin (160 mg/day) and clopidogrel (75 mg/day) in patients with acute ischemic stroke caused by unilateral internal carotid artery dissection. Ninety-nine patients (41 in the IVT group, 58 in the IVT plus oral dosing group) were randomly assigned to treatment. Baseline characteristics, including stroke severity (National Institutes of Health Stroke Scale score), the rates of occlusive vessel, and the status of the carotid artery were comparable between the 2 groups. The rates of unfavorable outcomes (modified Rankin Scale score, 3 to 6), which was the primary end point, did not significantly differ between the 2 groups (IVT, 46.6% vs IVT plus oral dosing, 60.3%; P=0.193). However, the rate of symptomatic intracranial hemorrhages was significantly lower in the IVT plus oral dosing group than in the IVT group (17.2% vs 34.1%; P=0.037). Among the 24 patients who received IVT and were followed up for more than 6 months after stroke, the rate of recurrent stroke was significantly lower in the IVT plus oral dosing group than in the IVT group (1.7% vs 20.8%; P=0.029). Adverse events of symptomatic intracranial hemorrhage were more frequently observed in the IVT group, but no differences
